Glorious film making of love loneliness and hope

Reviewed in the United Kingdom on 27 June 2022

A wonderful experience all round. Antony Hickling has created a glorious piece of cinema. Touching on subjects of fear, loneliness, leavings and love, Down In Paris takes you on a journey of one man's exploration of what makes him happy. On his travels over one night he encounters many people who carry him along on his voyage of self discovery. At times raw and new and too tender to touch, Down In Paris is in many ways life-affirming and uplifting. The cast are superb all round. The directors central performance is supported by a solid cast, with Claire Loiseau as a sex worker and Dominique Frot amazing interlude as a clairvoyant worth a special mention. It is understandable that Down In Paris will be a highlight of the LGBTQI+, and mainstream, Film Festival season.
